Colour

Colour palette

As a digital-first brand it is important that we meet global colour accessibility standards for all digital work, including web, app and documents that will be read online.

The colours here have been carefully selected using the Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG) matching AA accessibility standards. When applying colour to headings below 14px on screen, please check that your colour contrast complies.

Refer to the One NZ Brand Guidelines for more colour guidance.

Graphs & diagrams

There are 10 secondary colours specific to graphs and diagrams. Each colour pair has been selected to work on a 1pt line while still being clearly differentiated. Additionally, all colours meet WCAG when used on a white background.

Typography

Brand typeface

Euclid Circular A

Our primary brand typeface is Euclid Circular A. It was selected for its readability and open, approachable style.

Euclid Circular A is very easy to read so font weights can be lighter and smaller than traditional fonts. Always aim to achieve elegance when choosing font weights for your layout.

Euclid Circular A is available in 4 weights (plus their italic counterparts): Light, Regular, Medium and Semibold.

Euclid Circular A is used for all copy.

While there is some flexibility to use a range of font sizes to enable creative composition, within eDMs font sizes are mostly prescribed. See page 22 for specifications.

Backup typeface

Arial

Copy will default to Arial in cases where Euclid Circular A is not supported.

Overview

Principles

Our email design system is structured to be simple and flexible. It is built on our core principles of excellence and efficiency.

These guidelines outline the different blocks and how to use them. It includes guides for writers, designers and developers to help drive consistency, simplicity and distinctiveness in email.

Excellence

Best practice design

Simplicity

Simple, clear and easy to read design... so customers can easily scan emails

Consistency

‘Matching luggage’ design that amplifies brand and ties in to web/app

Efficiency

Easy to build and use

Flexibility

Choice of modules and templates to deliver different needs

Practicality

Simple, easy-to-use components that limit build and development time

Email design system

Our eDMs follow a clear structure while allowing flexibility, using a system of ‘blocks’ that can be mixed and matched.

Using various blocks, we’re able to hero features, highlight calls to action and make our emails easy to read.

These include:

- 1. Pre-copy
- 2. Header blocks
- 3. Intro blocks
- 4. Content cards
- 5. Info blocks
- 6. Banners
- 7. Base

Emails can be crafted with almost any combination of the pre-set blocks.

Important Spam

To avoid emails being flagged as spam the image and copy balance must be taken into consideration. Ideally the total content should contain no more than 40% imagery.

Mobile view

As the majority of our eDMs (excluding business) are opened on mobile, we need to reinforce mobile-first design principles.

TXT in the middle of nowhere

Love to head out exploring, but like to stay in touch? It's easy. Now anyone with an eligible phone and plan can TXT in the middle of nowhere with us.

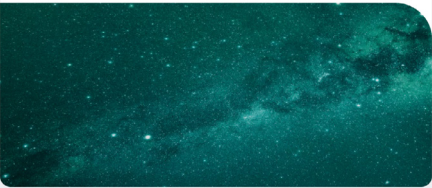

Here's what you need to get going:

-  A satellite-ready phone
-  A plan that includes Satellite TXT
-  A clear line of sight to the sky

Check your device

Aim for the stars. It's easy.

It's easy to use. If you can clearly see the sky, the satellite can see your phone. And it kicks in automatically when you need it.

Peace of mind in your pocket

It's an extra level of safety when you need it. Broken down in the middle of nowhere? Just send a TXT for help.

Be one of the first in the world

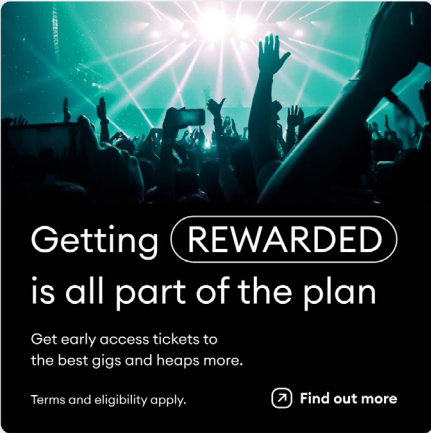

It's world-first technology. While others may be talking tech, One NZ customers already send over 10,000 TXTs a day.

Getting REWARDED is all part of the plan

Dark mode

Designers should consider how dark mode will affect layout and assets in both desktop and mobile view.

One Grey 900 copy will automatically change to white in dark mode.

Icons do not change colour in dark mode so they must have a white circle background and be saved as a PNG file. This will ensure that they remain visible in dark mode.

04

Layout

Pre-copy

There are three important sections of copy that appear at the beginning of every email. Their function is to make the first impression, grabbing attention and setting expectations.

Subject line

The first thing the customer sees, when the email arrives in their inbox. Its job is to entice the customer to open the email and read on. It should not exceed 50 characters, to ensure it does not get cut-off.

Pre-header

The pre-header copy adds additional context or a teaser to encourage the recipient to open the email. It usually appears below the subject line, however not all browsers display one so it should not be relied upon for critical information. Pre-headers should not exceed 80 characters.

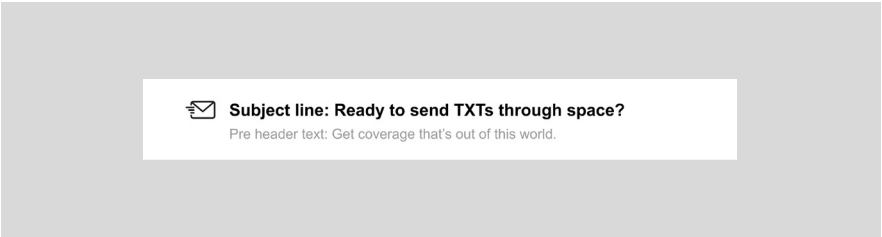

Together, the subject line and pre-header form the email’s front-facing message–like a headline and subheading.

Read online

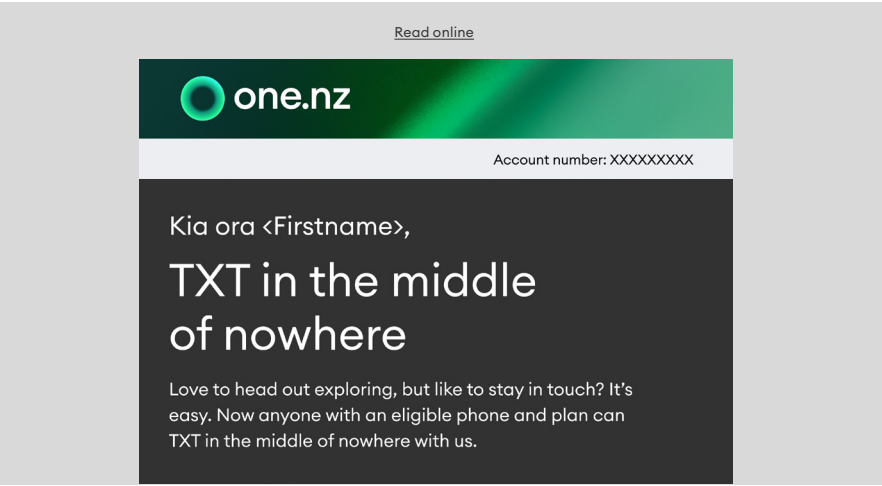

This is a link for the customer to view the email in their browser.

The background is set to light grey on desktop and white on mobile, so that it blends into the background.

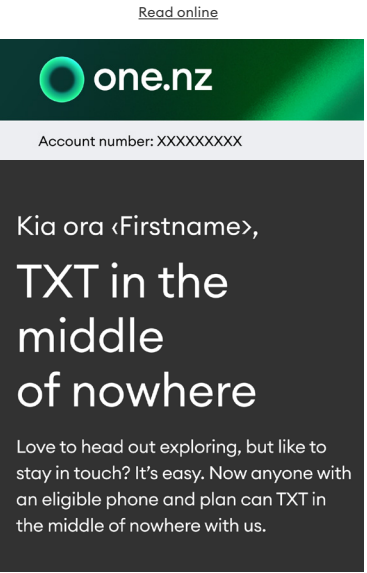

Subject line & Pre-header copy

Header blocks

Header blocks anchor every email and feature our narrow logo, positioned on the left over our texture. They also house key information, like account number and One Wallet Phone Dollars balance in a One Grey 50 strip.

Simple header

Where we don’t have data, or need to communicate with urgency (e.g. remediations) we use a simplified header.

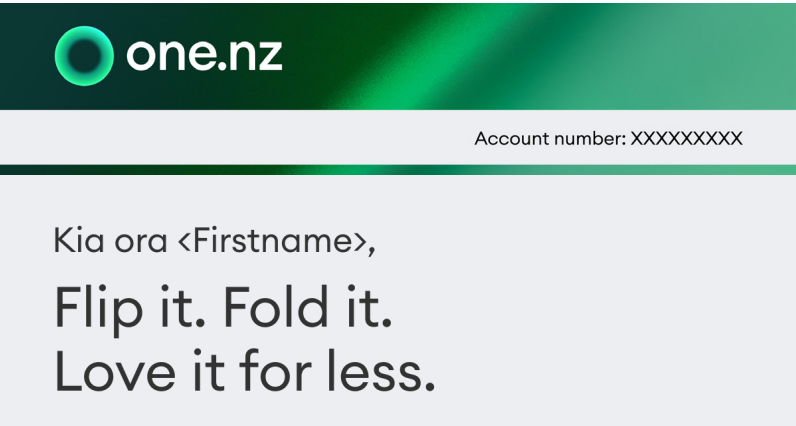

Membership header

Our Membership header includes a customer’s One Wallet Phone Dollars balance and ID.

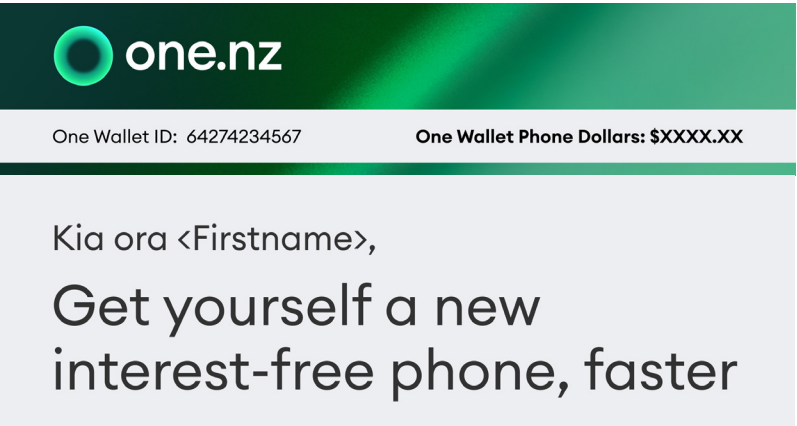

Narrow texture strip

Some emails feature an additional narrow texture strip below the key information. This strip is only shown when above white or light grey blocks, to avoid the sections blending with one another. It is omitted when above dark greens, greys and blacks.

Intro blocks

The intro block is our hook. It grabs attention, sets the tone, and tells readers what’s in it for them.

It should be quick, clear, and compelling enough to make people want to keep reading.

Note: Terms are housed in the Base – see page 19.

Content cards

Content cards deliver one single-minded message in a bite-sized block. They’re designed to be easy to scan and easy to act upon.

There are five options to suit, with a short subhead and tight supporting copy. They can be used with or without a CTA.

Important specifications for designers

Static image requirements

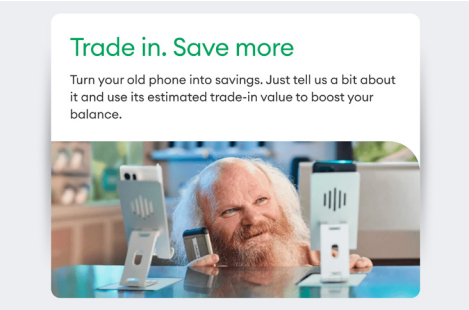

File size must be below 300KB and output as a jpeg file.

Animated image requirements

File size must be below 1MB and output as a GIF file.

It is mandatory to put the end frame as the first frame of the animation as GIFs are not supported for some email recipients.

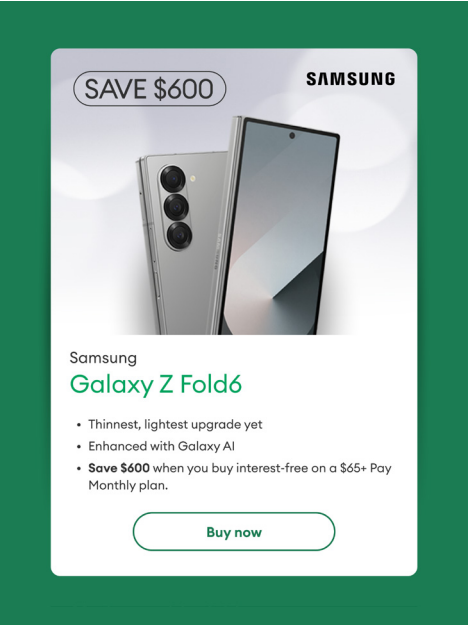

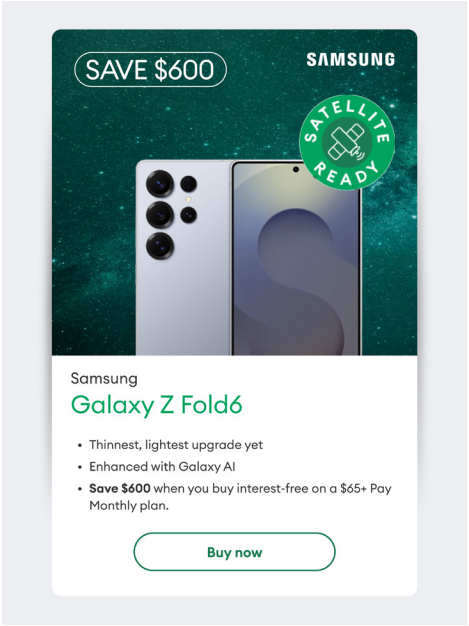

Image card

Key features:

- Great for pulling out features
- Punchy headline (max 48 characters)
- Tight copy (max 160 characters)
- Brand, lifestyle, or product image

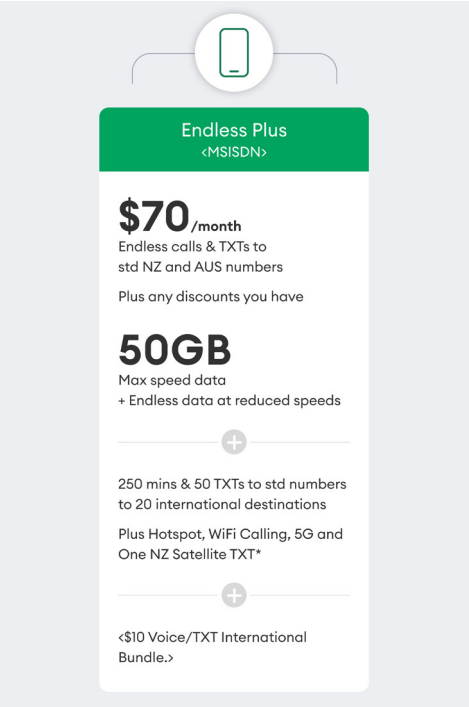

Offer cards

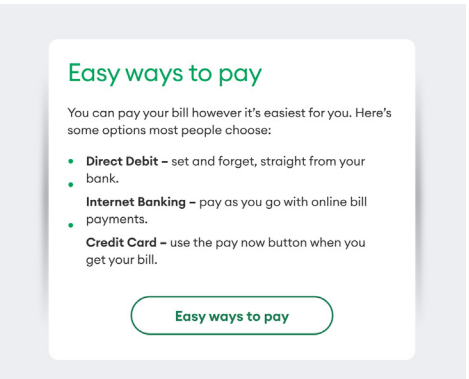

Key features:

- Clear product image and partner logo
- Hero benefit and/or price in a bubble (2 words max) above product image
- Punchy headline (max 48 characters)
- Super tight bullets, sentences or a combination of both (max 130 characters)
- Option of One Green 600 or One Grey 50 background to contrast with product image

Plan card

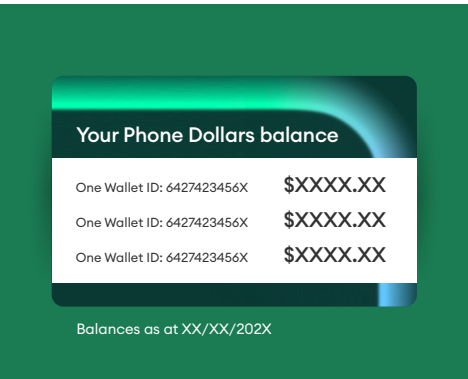

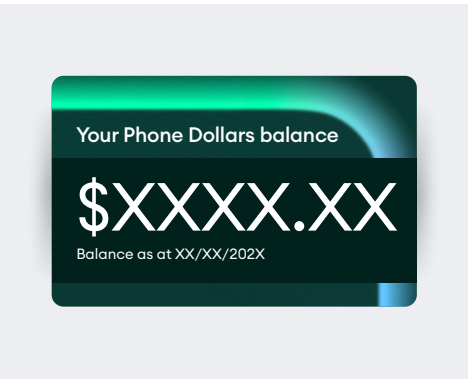

Bullet card

Key features:

- Info version of an image card
- Punchy headline (max 48 characters)
- Tight bullets (max 80 characters each)
- Total of 350 characters

One Wallet cards

Key features:

- One Wallet texture and icon
- ID and Phone Dollars balance information
- Option of light or dark balance strip to ensure contrast with email background colour

Key features:

- Name and number up front
- Price and data as hero
- Additional (key) features below
- Add-Ons listed under

Info blocks

An info block is a clean, copy-only section with a subhead and body copy or bullet points. It’s great for detail, instructions, or supporting info that doesn’t require an image.

Info blocks may also contain copy links or a secondary CTA.

White

Subhead

Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet consectetur. Integer a elementum a sed cras. Arcu id sit volutpat id aenean vulputate.

- Read more about how it works
- Discover how others are using it

Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet consectetur. Integer a elementum a sed cras. Arcu id sit volutpat id aenean vulputate.

Key features:

- Primary copy block
- Best used when more detail is needed
- No character limits, but aim to keep things tight and simple
- Ideally no paragraph longer than three lines. Create air between thoughts.

One Grey 50

Subhead

Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet consectetur. Integer a elementum a sed cras. Arcu id sit volutpat id aenean vulputate ut et. Enim mattis platea consequat eu. Fringilla aliquet ut imperdiet laoreet lacus. Consectetur leo vitae porttitor volutpat malesuada nisi.

Key features:

- Secondary copy block
- Used to break up info blocks but not stand out too much
- No max character count but keep it as concise as possible

One Green 50

Subhead

Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet consectetur

 Online help

Key features:

- Used to highlight a message
- Can stand out, so ideally keep short, under 350 characters

One Grey 900

Subhead

Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet consectetur. Integer a elementum a sed cras. Arcu id sit volutpat id aenean vulputate ut et. Enim mattis platea consequat eu.

Key features:

- Used sparingly, only when there’s a message that needs to clearly stand out
- Ideally under 250 characters

Call to action

A call to action (CTA) is the prompt that tells the reader what to do next. It should be clear, direct, and action-oriented. Whether that’s clicking a button, signing up, or finding out more. It’s the moment where interest turns into action.

Button CTAs allow for 24 characters max. Tertiary and copy link CTAs are best kept short.

Email CTAs follow design cues from the website, with four styles to choose from.

Primary	Secondary	Tertiary	Copy links
About your bill Easy ways to pay Note: Double buttons should be stacked Do it now Remind me later Key features: The main action we want people to take Use sparingly, ideally only once per email Examples: Join now Get started Upgrade now	Easy ways to pay Key features: Supporting action that’s still important Can have several per email Examples: Learn more View details Compare plans	Online help Key features: Low priority or supporting action Styled as a link, not a button Hover state = underline Examples: Unsubscribe View in browser Read FAQs	Read more about how it works Key features: Action is optional, informational or low urgency Should feel like a ‘nice to have’, not the critical main action Hover state = One Green 600 Examples: Link to terms Link to FAQs Link to web articles or footnotes

Banners

Value-add banners that have a single-minded cross-sell message can be included in any email communication as ‘drag and drop’.

They should be approved by the business and are usually repurposed from ATL creative.

The bubble graphic is a key component that features in banners. It can be applied as a Key Detail Highlight in the headline or in a Product Label.

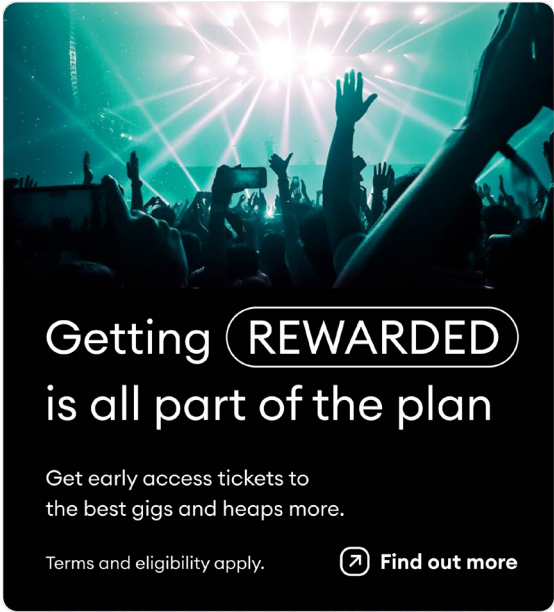

In Action layer headlines, we highlight one or two words that are the customer benefit (cost, saving or value) using the following rules:.

- 1. Highlight the benefit and dollar figure when they appear together
- 2. Highlight the benefit only, when it appears separate from the dollar figure.

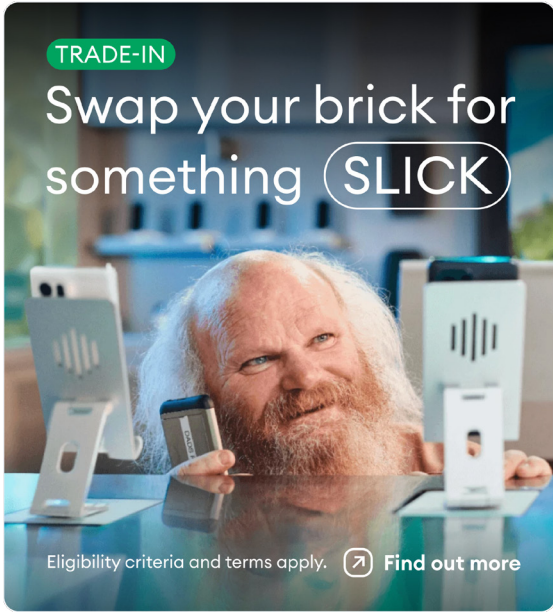

We never use more than one bubble in a headline.

Refer to the One NZ Brand Guidelines for more guidance on bubble usage.

Sign-off and base

A sign-off wraps up the email with a friendly close. It reinforces the tone, includes standard sign-off from the team at One NZ, and leaves the reader with a final encouragement to act, a reminder, or just a simple thanks.

The base is the last section of the email where terms are displayed.

One NZ logo

When the email content is short, the One NZ logo in the Header block provides sufficient branding. When the email content is long, the logo is added to reinforce branding.

Base background

The base background colour is white for consumer, and One Grey 50 for business.

Business branding

There are subtle design cues that distinguish business emails from consumer.

Business header

Business header textures skew darker green with pops of blue. ‘BUSINESS’ copy is highlighted with a bubble and sits opposite the One NZ logo.

Content cards

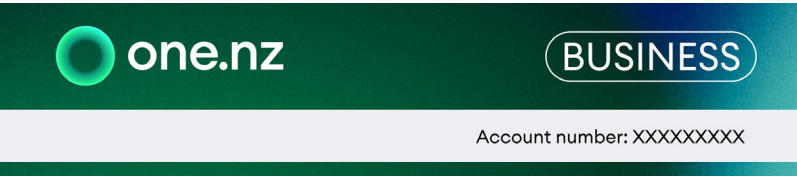

Business content cards work in the same way as consumer but feature imagery that reflects New Zealand business.

Refer to the One NZ Brand Guidelines for more guidance on imagery.

Sign-off and base

The base copy is tailored to our business customers and includes our full address.

Examples

Here are some examples of the design system applied across various types of communications.

Rewards

Features the simple header and event key visuals in the intro block and content cards.

Membership

Features the Membership header and ATL creative.

Compliance

These are more instructional and feature only necessary imagery.
